The Little Magic....

It was a rainy day. I had stopped at the bus stand, waiting for the rain to stop so I could start walking again. Suddenly, a girl came into my life. We were the only two people at the stop. She started talking to me so casually that, for a moment, I wondered if I already knew her. She kept talking without even asking my name. Before leaving, she finally said, “I’m Sachi. And you?”

“I’m Abhinav,” I replied.
“Oh, okay then. I’m going,” she said with a smile.
“Haa,” I nodded, watching her leave.

The next day, at the same time, she came again.

I stood there thinking, what if I just say hi to her?

Before I could speak, she looked at me and said,

“Hi... Abhinav, right?”

“Yes,” I replied, a little surprised.

We started talking. Every time she had to leave, I felt like, bas itna hi samay?

How quickly it goes... arey yaar.

I still didn’t dare to ask for her number. I don’t know when I’ll gather that kind of courage. But I know one thing I didn’t miss her, and I really mean it.

Days passed. Somewhere in between, I finally gathered the courage to write a love letter to her.

That evening, I waited at the bus stand, clutching the letter in my hand.

She arrived, smiling as always, and before I could even say a word she handed me a letter.

For a moment my heart stopped is this a love letter?

But it wasn't.

I quietly hid my own letter behind me.

She looked at me and said softly, "I got a seat in Surathkal University. I'm moving to Maharashtra."

Hoo... for a second it felt like my heart just stopped pumping.

All I could think was, How can I let this girl go?

I said goodbye to her, watching her walk away.

In my heart a storm was going on if only I had expressed my feelings... maybe we could have had a happy life together .....

How crazy it is she came into my life when I didn't need her, and she left when I needed her the most.
Hoo... that girl was like a love letter in this double-tap world.
